DESIGNED FOR WASTE

Arkansas Democrat

The problem of abandoned motor vehicles is partly a matter of design. Cars and trucks are designed for efficiency in assembly, not disassembly. If they were more easily taken apart, the demands of the salvage business would greatly reduce the number of junk vehicles littering the landscape.

As it is, there is a good demand for parts that are easily removed — carburetors, fuel pumps, radios, radiators and motors if in good condition. But once a car is stripped of such things, and this often takes place on the roadside, the remaining hulk costs more to haul away than a salvager could realize from sale of the metals. A very efficient salvager, few of which exist, can separate the component metals of a car for $51.25, and the value of the scrap metal is only $55.94, according to a Bureau of Mines estimate.

Some design changes that could make salvage more profitable are: making electric motors more accessible, putting wiring all in a single coil that can be quickly removed and locating many removable parts on a panel, such as the firewall, that can be easily removed. Such changes could also speed up repairs, which often are delayed by the need to remove one part to get to another that is to be repaired. So this kind of change would result in a double benefit.

That leaves the problem of getting scrap dealers to take the remaining hulk, which can only be ground up for scrap metal. The ultimate answer may be in the development of technology to grind and separate, and some progress has been made. But the short-range solution is eliminating part of the cost to the salvager.

The logical cost for government to assume is the expense of picking up and hauling car and truck bodies to salvage yards. The Tennessee Valley Authority, noticing that car bodies are a major blight in its area, devised a program of providing this service. It published a booklet showing communities how to operate pick-up projects. As a further incentive, it lends collection vehicles to cities and counties for up to four months.

Another service in the project is a design for a truck chassis to pick up car bodies. The frame tilts like a dump truck bed, and a winch pulls the car body onto the frame. It can be built for $1,200 and TVA sends copies of the plans free upon request. The agency says in its booklet that response to the program has been "overwhelming." It reports that 16,000 cars were picked up and recycled between the beginning of the program in 1970 and October of 1972.

This sounds like a good project for the new solid waste division of the Arkansas Pollution Control and Ecology Department. It should request details from TVA and begin to encourage Arkansas cities and counties to start pick-up programs. Then it should encourage the development of recycling plants in the state, to get car bodies out of junkyards as well as the countryside.

The story of the madstone.

The madstone, originating in Central Europe centuries ago, was believed by many early Arkansas settlers to have great curative powers. A rare, porous stone found in the stomach or brain of an albino deer, the madstone was used to treat many ailments including snakebite. The madstone was boiled in whole milk and placed on the snakebite. If it didn't stick, the snake wasn't poisonous; if it did, practitioners believed, the madstone would draw out all of the venom from the bite.

Caywood turns out 2 a month

Still making muzzle-loaders

By FAUNE CONNER
Travel Writer Department of Parks and Tourism

Charles Caywood of near Huntsville, Ark., is a rather unusual man, both in terms of his life style and his occupation, but these two facets of his life go hand in hand, and Caywood says he wouldn't have it any other way.

Caywood is an expert of the early American craftsmanship of making muzzle loading, flintlock rifles and single-shot pistols and, living in a one room combination cabin and workshop, he is able to painstakingly produce two of these exotic weapons a month.

Formerly a Joplin, Mo. businessman, Caywood came to the backwood north Arkansas hills in 1971 after he decided to turn his favorite hobby into a full-time occupation. Purchasing three acres on a mountainside overlooking the King's River, he built, with the help of friends, a small log cabin equipped only with a native stone fireplace and electricity.

Caywood has no indoor plumbing or running water, and his only heat is from the fireplace. He "bathes in the river" during the warm seasons and in front of fire "in a tub" during the winter. He hauls his drinking water from a nearby spring and cooks all of his meals on a wood burning stove. The only modern conveniences Caywood allows himself are a refrigerator and a radio (because he doesn't have to watch it), and his furnishings are kept to the simple basics including potato sack curtains.

Besides being an outdoorsman at heart, Caywood said that his life style is also a result of his occupation. "Although building guns is rewarding personally, it is not so rewarding financially," he says, and in order to afford the luxury of this relaxed living he must cut corners on expenses.

Despite his rather rustic living conditions, Caywood's cabin is neat and cozy, and the congenial, red bearded craftsman usually pails host each weekend to out-of-town friends who enjoy roughing it for a few days.

Caywood's skill as a gun maker is widely known, and he never has to advertise. All of his guns are special orders, and he tries to build every gun as authentic and original as possible and to the style requested by the customer.

The 40-year old Caywood first became interested in old guns—and similar things of antiquity—as a child when he went hunting quite often with members of his family. He was around the age of 20 when he made his first flintlock on the kitchen table and he has been making them ever since.

Picking up skills as he went along, Caywood says learning the steps of building muzzle loading guns was a slow and gradual one. He still researches histories of the flintlock and is continually looking for new patterns and ideas.

The first flintlocks appeared in the latter part of the 16th century and were a great improvement over the earlier matchlock guns. The English military used a well known flintlock called "Brown Bess", and the gun was later adapted for common usage in the form of a blunderbuss. The trumpet-shaped blunderbuss was quite efficient for the protection of home and property and was often used to ward off thieves and murdering highwaymen.

The first flintlocks in America were heavy German models reputed to be more accurate than those of other European manufacture. The flintlock rifles became popular weapons with the army and navy and flintlock pistols were often used as dueling pieces. The best known flintlock made in America was the "Kentucky Rifle", the gun that settled the frontier.

"Though many improvements have been made during the flintlock's 400 year history, it still operates on the same basic principle", Caywood explained. "To load the gun, powder is poured into the barrel and a patched lead ball is then pushed on top of the powder with a ramrod or "viper stick". A piece of flint held in the gun's hammer strikes a frizzen, causing a shower of sparks to ignite the powder in the flash pan. The powder then burns through a small "touch hole" in the barrel and sets off the main charge."

Caywood begins the creation of his flintlocks by first sawing the stock to a rough shape. The stock is traditionally made out of curly maple (also called fiddleback maple) or tiger stripe and the wood has a distinctively striped grain when stained. He then selects the barrel, mounts the butt plate and drills the ramrod hole. Next he iricks the lock and trigger assembly, mounts the patch box, carves the design and adds silver and brass decorations.

Caywood makes all of the gun parts himself except for the barrel which he buys pre-made. His large array of work instruments are arranged at one end of the cabin and are mostly wood and metal files and chisels which he says "are the gunmaker's tools". He estimates it takes approximately 100 hours to build a flintlock gun, and when finished, pistols, rifles or shotguns sell from $250 up. He also teaches customers how to fire the guns using a makeshift target range outside his cabin door.

According to Caywood, flintlock guns are characterized by their long barrels and patchboxes, the hollowed out portions in the stock where extra flints and patches are stored. In the early days each flintlock came equipped with a mold for making bullets and the mold was kept in a pouch which the owner carried swung over his shoulder along with his "powder horn".

Different types of older flintlocks are recognizable by a certain design or symbol attached to them and some of the more popular designs were stars, eagles, doves, fish and the moon. Caywood prefers the star pattern and etches it out of a piece of metal before embedding it in the stock of the gun.

In discussing the universal popularity of flintlocks, Caywood mentioned that his customers are from all sections of the United States and include many women who are avid antique gun enthusiasts.

Throughout the nation, muzzle loading gun contests are increasing in number, and the contests are usually family events with all ages participating. Caywood finds time to go to seven or eight shooting matches a year but says it is only for the fun of it. An expert gunsmith, he says he is, ironically, a notoriously bad shot. For Charles Caywood, his reward is living a simple life of his own choosing and making magnificent flintlocks for others to enjoy.

Heavy U.S bombing buildup is reported in Saigon region

SAIGON (AP) — Four North Vietnamese tanks, spotted closer to Saigon than any such armor ever before, were knocked out by South Vietnamese bombers at rubber plantations 40 miles northwest of the capital, military headquarters said today.

Allied spokesmen also reported that heavy U.S. bombing in the region, where a North Vietnamese buildup was reported under way, set off secondary explosions indicating hits on ammunition caches. South Vietnamese troops found similar caches.

A series of small skirmishes was reported Friday along the Saigon River corridor between the Michelin and Lai Khe rubber plantations, 35 to 40 miles northwest of the capital, in the region where the tanks and trucks were reported destroyed. The Saigon River corridor is a traditional infiltration route toward the capital.

Discount rate boost is seen

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Federal Reserve Board has decided to boost the rate it charges member banks for borrowing money for the first time in a year, but says it shouldn't lead to another increase in interest rates across the nation.

The board announced Friday that, effective Monday, the discount rate that it charges member banks for borrowing will go from 4.5 per cent to 5 per cent.

Watergate:

More guilty pleas brewing after closed court session

WASHINGTON (AP) — More guilty pleas may be brewing in the Watergate trial, according to reports, with defendants and attorneys conferring over the weekend after a mysterious closed-door court session.

It was understood that four of the defendants were feeling pressure Friday to plead guilty and avoid further trial, as did former White House consultant E. Howard Hunt Jr.

But at least two of the defendants, G. Gordon Liddy and James W. McCord Jr., were reported holding out for a full trial that may take many weeks. It resumes Monday in open session.

No public business was conducted Friday in the trial of the six remaining persons charged in connection with the break-in and alleged bugging last June 17 of Democratic National headquarters in Washington's Watergate complex.

After government prosecutors argued peripheral motions in the U.S. Court of Appeals in the morning, U.S. District Court Judge John J. Sirica moved into a surprise closed-door session in the afternoon with only the defendants, their lawyers, and a hastily summoned Spanish interpreter present.

Henry B. Rothblatt, New York lawyer defending four Miami defendants was questioned about reports that the group might replace him with an attorney who would agree to enter a guilty plea.

"This could happen. An attorney can be dismissed at any time," Rothblatt replied.

Asked if there was a possibility of guilty pleas being offered, Rothblatt said, "Not by me."

Meanwhile, reports persisted that the Miami defendants, all with Cuban backgrounds, may plead guilty.

Newsday, a Long Island, N.Y. newspaper, reported that the four had been promised $1,000 each for every month they spend in jail and an undisclosed lump sum when they get out of prison if they plead guilty.

The paper said sources close to the defendants identified the group promising the cash only as "friends from Miami," including, the paper said, a prominent figure in the abortive Bay of Pigs invasion.

By GEORGE SMITH

Weather permitting, the Hope High School Drama Class will present two plays based on the popular Dr. Suess characters — "Horton Hatches the Egg" and "The Big Brag."

Several young critics at Beryl Henry School were asked to review the play. (They saw it back in December.) and below are some chosen choice comments of critique:

Dear High School:
I saw the show Horton Hatches the Egg but it was just as good. I liked Dr. Suess.

Joe Fast

Dear High School:
Thank you for putting on Horton Hatches the Egg. It is the best show the I has ever seen before. I enjoyed it very much. I thout that the costumes were very quite. We all enjoyed so much.

Toby Edwards

Dear High School:
I loved the play. The costumes were fantastic. You have real good actors. The person who played Doctor Sue was real good. The girl who played the bird was real good and the others were real good too.

Scott Schoen

Dear Horton Hatches the Egg
Thank you for bringing it to us. Thank you everyone. It was kind of you to bring it to us. I liked the elephant and the hunters. I liked the Dr. Suess. I liked the costumes.

Paula Clem

Dear high school:
I liked Horton when hatched the egg. I like when the bird came back too. I like the mucus too. I am glad you invited us. I like all the people too. I liek the hunters too. I like the elephant when he hatches the egg.

Cynthia Gail Moten

Dear High school thank you for letting us come see the play you put on. I like Horton because He said I ment what I said. I said what I ment. And faithfall 100 percent.

Clay Davis

Dear Janet (a participant in the play)
Thank you for asking me to come. I like the park that you did. Your sucker was good looking.

Tad D.

Dear high school:
Thank you for coming to Beryl Henry School. I liked when Horton hatched the egg and the bird got mad. And I liked the music at the first of the show. I like where Horton's friends made fun of him.

Shalah Lockhart

Dear High School:
Thank you invited us we liked it very much. I liked the clown he was Robie Boy I like the elephant Horton Hatches the Egg all was good.

Teresa Eadsley

Dear high school
I wonder why the bird did not fly. Im sorry you did not get your egg back. I liked the part when the bird came back. I no who the bird was her name is Nita.

Bill Huddleston

Dear Horton
Thank you for coming. I liked Horton

I liked the bird. I liked Dr. Suess. I liked the music. I liked the costumes. I liked the hunter. I liked the elephant bird. I liked the hole thing.

Jennifer Branch

Dear High school friends.
We were glad you had invited to the play. We did not get to see the bird or should I say elephant. Oh and by the way tell Anita I said she would make a good mother bird. Whell good-by.

HORTON THE ELEPHANT

ART BY TOBY EDWARDS

My wife and I recently ordered a POW-MIA bracelet after planning to do so for more than a year. But, as we will in this hustle-bustle world, we never really got around to it.

Early in December, I ordered two stainless steel bracelets from VIVA, (Voices in Vital America) a non-profit, non-political national student organization dedicated to the fact that progress and freedom can only be achieved and maintained by rational and responsible action.

The bracelets also come in copper, but since I have never believed in the therapeutic qualities of copper, and since I didn't want a green wrist, I ordered the stainless steel.

It was a little act, I felt, that would draw us closer to someone, alive or dead, directly connected with the Vietnam War, a war I have long felt that is unnecessary, useless and inhumane.

My bracelet bears the inscription, Maj. J. S. Jayroe, 1-19-67. Who is he? Where is he? Is he alive? Dead? Being mistreated?

See? That's the purpose of the bracelets — to make each and every one aware that The War is not so foreign after all. The Vietnam War is a conflict in a country with funny sounding names for its cities and its people, but a war in which Americans—like Maj. J. S. Jayroe—are missing.

The bracelets are $2.50 for the stainless steel and $3 each for copper. The address is VIVA, 10966 Le Conte Avenue, Los Angeles, Calif. 90024.

South lost no time mislaying his hand. He grabbed the first heart lead; laid down his king of diamonds; led his second diamond and finessed dummy's jack.

East popped on his queen and returned a heart. South struggled along slowly from that point on, but when the smoke had cleared away he had managed to collect only seven tricks. No re-entry to those good diamonds.

South had been rather unlucky. Put the queen of diamonds over in the West hand and he would have made a lot of tricks, but South really shouldn't have been looking for a lot of tricks. He wanted just nine, which was all he needed for game and rubber.

How should he have gone after nine? His first diamond play should have been the deuce to dummy's jack. If East took the trick with the queen, South would be sure of four club tricks and at least five tricks in other suits.

Suppose West held the queen, or that East was able to visualize the diamond situation and let that jack hold. South would take a successful spade finesse; get back to dummy by overtaking his king of diamonds with the ace; take another spade finesse and wind up with three spades, two hearts, two diamonds and two clubs for a nine trick total.

Could this line of play fail to work? Yes, but only if everything possible went wrong, not just if one thing did.

Aye, there's a rub in the business scheme

By Abigail Van Buren

© 1973 by Chicago Tribune-M. Y. News Synd., Inc.

DEAR ABBY: Last year my brother went into a new venture and he's doing a terrific business. It is a massage parlor. He has girls do the massaging, and the customers are all men. I think you get the idea.

Well, my brother asked my husband to manage the place. I was against it from the start. My brother takes in about $4,000 to $5,000 a month. My husband is a salesman, and if he clears $150 a week he is lucky.

My brother told my husband if he would manage the massage parlor he would pay him $1,000 a month, plus at the end of the year my husband could buy the business from him, and my brother would open another parlor.

My husband wants to accept. All that is holding him back is me. I don't want my husband in a business like this.

Do I have a right to come between him and the money? Also, my husband being around those willing young girls all day is something else to consider.

We have three children. Would they be proud of their dad in this kind of a business?

Everybody says I am wrong. What do you say?

HOLDING TIGHT

DEAR HOLDING: I say you're right. [But don't rub it in.]

DEAR ABBY: Three weeks ago, Jimmy and I met on a blind date neither one of us wanted to go on, but we went to get our friends off our backs. I am 22 and Jimmy is 24.

We hit it off perfectly. He took me to dinner. We danced and laughed and joked and found we had a lot in common. When he brought me home neither one of us wanted to say good night, so I invited him in [I have my own apartment] and we talked until 5 a. m. He kissed me only once and that's the truth. I let him sleep on my couch and the next morning we went to church together as it was Sunday. This may sound crazy, but I'm telling it like it is.

Jimmy is so sweet and clean and wonderful. I've never felt this way about anybody in my life and neither has Jimmy. We've spent every possible moment together since we met and he's never laid a hand on me and neither has anybody else. [This took a lot of self-control as we are very much in love!] Jimmy wants to marry me as soon as possible, but Abby, this all happened so fast, I can't believe it.

Our friends say Jimmy and I should live together first to find out if we are sexually compatible, but Abby, I have always wanted to save myself until after marriage. Jimmy says it's up to me. Should I or shouldn't I? Please be honest.

IN LOVE IN TAMPA

DEAR IN LOVE: Compatibility is based on loving, caring, sharing, unselfishness, and mutual consideration and respect, and from your letter, I'd say you and Jimmy have it. Feeling as you do—for which you are to be commended—the guilt you would experience from premarital sex would damage your self-respect. Since you've waited this long, wait to catch that golden ring. God bless you.

DEAR ABBY: Before my husband and I met, he got a married woman pregnant and she had his child—a boy. My husband and I have a daughter. How is our daughter related to that boy my husband fathered?

Would you recommend the offspring be told they have the same father? They go to the same school, and are now teenagers, and there is a possibility of a budding romance. All the relations know about this mess.

OMAHA MIXUP

DEAR OMAHA: They are half brother and sister, which is closer than the law allows for marriage. I wouldn't tell them they have the same father unless I felt it were positively necessary. The "forbidden" aspect of such a romance might enhance it.

DEAR ABBY: Thanks a million for publishing the address of WAIF, the International Service office thru which one may adopt a Vietnamese orphan.

I am a single serviceman who spent 18 months in Saigon and I adopted two boys from an orphanage there. One I brought back with me last January and the other came in March. [He was only 11 years old and flew 10,000 miles by himself].

It's a lot easier to adopt them if you are over there, but it is possible to adopt them thru WAIF. The only Vietnamese law about it is that you must be 20 years older than the child you adopt.

R. V. IN JACKSONVILLE, FLA.

DEAR R. V.: Thanks for giving me another opportunity to repeat the address. It's WAIF, 345 E. 46th St., New York.

LOOKING LIKE THE PROFESSOR he once was. Sen. Mike Mansfield, D-Mont., is back at his stand as Senate majority leader in the new Congress.

The first meeting of the new year of the Cora May W.M.A. circle of Garrett Memorial Baptist Church was in the home of Mrs. Gladys Gentry.

Mrs. Louise Churchwell led the singing accompanied Mrs. Donna Sayers. Prayers were led by Mrs. Anna Hanson, Gwen Frith and Mrs. Norene Purtle.

The business session was presided over by Mrs. Margaret Still during which plans were made for the District W.M.A. meeting to be held at Garrett Memorial on Jan. 16.

Mrs. Gwen Allen, assistant program chairman presented a program entitled "Hats off to the past, coats off to the future." The closing prayer was led by Mrs. Florine Booth. Assorted snacks, dessert and punch was enjoyed by 14 members and two guests, Mrs. Alice Arnett and Mrs. Ruby Fincher.

Honoring Our Designers

Who are America's most imaginative architects, designers, engineers and artists? What contributions are they making to the quality of modern life?

The Design In Steel Award program is now underway to recognize these outstanding men and women.

Professionals are eligible to be honored for their innovative use of steel in any kind of product, structure or component.

Art in steel awards—for both fine arts and crafts—will be given for sculptures, paintings on steel, murals, mobiles, jewelry and other creative art work.

A panel of 12 experts in design, architecture, engineering and contemporary arts and crafts will select the winners.

The 1972-1973 program, the sixth to be sponsored by the American steel industry, is the most comprehensive recognition program ever offered to design professionals.

Award winners will be announced at an award banquet. News about the winners and their work will appear in national newspapers, magazines and on TV.

Information on entering the program may be obtained by writing: Design In Steel Award Program, 201 East 12nd Street, New York, New York 10017.

WORLD ALMANAC FACTS

The Federal Reserve System, the central banking system of the U.S., was established Dec. 23, 1913, by Congress to give the nation an elastic currency and to improve supervision of banking. The World Almanac notes. Today the system's primary function is to foster a flow of credit and money that will facilitate orderly economic growth, a stable dollar, and a long-run balance of international payments. Tribute to President Truman

In conjunction with the current celebration of the 25th anniversary of the State of Israel, the Judaic Heritage Society announces the selection of Harry S. Truman as the recipient of the society's first Man of the Year Award.

President Truman was one of the first world statesmen to recognize Israel. 11 minutes after the new state was proclaimed by David Ben Gurion on May 14, 1948. With borders beset by neighbors determined to obliterate the new state at birth and push its people into the sea, President Truman's direct and simple action served notice to the world that Israel was not alone.

In her biography of her father, Margaret Truman writes: "This was a decision made by Dad alone, in spite of the opposition of the State Department..." Abba Eben in his recent book, "My Country," speaks glowingly of Harry Truman as the man rael, The Judaic Heritage Society honors Harry S. Truman for his historic service to the Jewish people." The obverse portrays Mr. Truman receiving a Torah scroll from Israel's first president, Chaim Weizmann, in May, 1948.

The society is making sterling silver and gold-plated silver specimens of this medal available to the public, both in proof condition. The sterling issue is limited to 10,000 pieces and sells for $15 and the gold-plated issue is limited to 5,000 pieces at $25. Each piece is serially numbered and comes with an appropriate lucite holder and base. Both medals measure 39 millimeters in diameter, which is slightly larger than a U.S. silver dollar.

Interested readers should address their orders or inquiries to Mr. Fred Bertman, The Judaic Heritage Society, Suite 4011, 886 United Nations Plaza, New York, N.Y. 10017.

Coin Columnist Retires

Thomas V. Haney, popular coin columnist for the New York Times, has decided to call it quits. After five years of writing one of the most widely read numismatic columns in the country, Tom has elected to lead the good life in semi-retirement. I use the term "semi" because, knowing Tom, I know it will be next to impossible for him to walk away from coin shows and conventions, and his many thousands of friends.

Tom's column in the Sunday edition was for collectors and noncollectors alike. And to many of us it was like reading rave notices for a Broadway play. If he found your book or coin display of exceptional merit, it usually made the column.

Mr. Haney is a member of many organizations, including the American Numismatic Association. He was recently elected to a second term as a director of the Numismatic Literary Guild, and more recently awarded a life membership in the Great Eastern Numismatic Association (GENA), with memberships in 30 states.

After Jan. 1, Tom intends to make himself available to numismatic clubs and conventions and will spend much of his time writing. (NEWSPAPER ENTERPRISE ASSN.)

Helen Help Us!

—by Helen Bottel—

Breaks Are Never Easy

HELEN AND SUE: I messed up once and now I think I have a "chance" to stay straight, but I'll have to hurt someone—and maybe get hurt, and I'm scared.

See, I went with this dude for two years, starting when I was 17. I had his baby in June, 1971, but we didn't get married because he was running from the law and went to prison (for dealing) a month after the baby came.

I loved my son but I wanted him to have a chance, so I gave him up for adoption, went home to my folks, and started a new life. People around here don't know about my past. I now have a good job, am going to school nights, and everything's great—except that my former guy still expects to come back to me and his baby. I never told him about the adoption, and I've kept on writing to him because you just can't drop a fella when he's down. I can't bear to hurt him.

When he left for prison he told me if I ever double crossed him I'd have hell to pay, and no matter what, I wasn't to give the baby up. But he didn't know how people treat a girl who's hooked up with a convicted druggie: no job, no friends, just lots of propositions—and a baby you can only get things for if you take them.

He writes that he'll be up for parole in six months and he expects us to be waiting for him. I don't want to run away—besides he might find me—but how do you tell a man—NOBODY'S WAITING?

N.W.: Don't wait any longer to tell this man the truth, but perhaps you can soften the blow if you work through the prison chaplain. Why not contact him and ask his help? When you face the situation squarely, you might discover that your "ex" suspects he has also outgrown YOU. Whatever, it's cruel—and dangerous—to continue building false hopes. —HELEN

N.W.: First, get over the feeling that you "just can't bear to hurt" this guy. He's going to be hurt—but he'll get over it. After all, you survived; so can he. I'd suggest you don't hit him all at once about the adoption. Ease into it gently by mentioning your changed attitude and life. Be careful what you write because a letter, without the inflections of voice, can change your meaning entirely. But long before the six months are up, you MUST level with him. Outside of running and hiding, there's no other way. —SUE

RAP: My last name is Rockefeller, but I'm not the rich one. That's hard for people to believe. I meet a new girl and she expects me to spend a fortune on her, when I don't even have two dimes, like the first Mr. R. used to give away.

My first name is Wallet (Wally for short). Maybe you think my folks had a weird sense of humor but actually it's a family name.

How would it be if I added another name—like THIN Wallet Rockefeller? —NOT A PIECE OF THE "ROCK"

...Or tell people the "Rock" in your name stands for "stone," as in "stone broke." —RAP

RAP: Geoff, the English bloke who blasted American birds, seems to be suffering from a common foreign disease: "False American Advertising."

INN Thing The Red Horse Inn at Sudbury, Mass., was the setting for longfellow's "Tales of a Wayside Inn." Destroyed by fire, it has been restored as one of the country's oldest operating inns.

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY

ARIES (Mar 21-Apr 19) The fewer irons in the fire today the better. Dividing concentration leads to oversights.

TAURUS (Apr 20-May 20) Piecemeal purchases may be mentally stimulating—but no real bargains in the long run. Buy sparingly.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) Your restlessness today could aggravate those in close contact with you. Set a course. Stick by it.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) If actions of someone annoy you, tell them—no! another. Coming from you, it's less painful.

LEO (July 23-Aug 22) A tale about a close friend is greatly inflated. Pin the instigators to facts.

VIRGO (Aug 23-Sept 22) If you've made a mistake, don't hedge. Admit it. Your reputation suffers if you shift the blame.

LIBRA (Sept 23-Oct 23) The greatest challenge to ourselves comes from our negative thoughts. Discard them if they pop up.

SCORPIO (Oct 24-Nov 22) Undue concern over material matters could produce some anxiety. Your glass is half-full, not half-empty.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov 23-Dec 21) A selfish association may annoy you with his one-sided bargaining. Wait till he's more reasonable.

CAPRICORN (Dec 22-Jan 19) Mistakes of coworkers could create havoc for you today. Try to keep them out of your affairs.

Woody Hayes: 'I'm a mean old Walrus!'

By MURRAY OLDERMAN

SAN FRANCISCO—(NEA) —Wayne Woodrow Hayes is a man so secure within himself that the slings and arrows of outrageous fortune would just naturally bend when they strike his rotund figure.

Woody has labored all his adult life in a field that has been assailed for hypocrisy and espousal of brutality, that of college head football coach. And since 1951 he has been at Ohio State, which symbolizes big-time college football with all its malevolent implications.

Does all this bother Woody Hayes?

"There is a segment of society," he shrugs, "which is against football or anything that's well organized."

And yet one wonders about the ethic of college football as it relates to this changing world.

"Ara Parseghian (of Notre Dame) tells the story," Hayes says, "of these two guys meeting on the street. And one says to the other, 'How's your wife?'"

"And the other answers, 'Compared to what?'"

"Well, compared to other activities of young people, football is so far and away in front that there's no contest. We put on a wholesome show which is sincere enough because we want to win."

Yet Woody Hayes, who has been described as troglodytic and contentious and sometimes just plain boorish in his behavior as a football leader, isn't oblivious to the gusts of change.

"The football guy is the anti-hero nowadays," he concedes. "A student is held in disrepute if he works like hell. The over-achiever, they look down on him."

"Last May, I ran across our football captain on campus. He was on a bike and he had his coat pulled up around his neck. It was warm and I wondered what he was doing dressed like that. He said, 'Coach, I didn't want to ride across campus and let people see me with a tie on.'"

Nevertheless, you can see Ohio State football players with their hair fashionably

WOODY HAYES, far right wearing striped tie, had to be restrained by an assistant Ohio State coach when he ripped the flag from a sideline marker and squared off with an official during the Buckeyes' 10-7 loss to Michigan last season. Hayes was angered by an official's call that went against Ohio State.

long and the blacks wear head bands and even their head coach can be seen in public wearing red, cuffless, flared trousers — though his own gray hair remains closely trimmed with the sideburns up around the tops of his ears.

"Why have rules you can't live up to?" sighs Woody, realistically. "You know, the kids we have on our team weren't born when I came to Ohio State."

"When it comes to the basic aspects of football, I'm too old to change. Our football players are more dedicated than they've ever been. They work like hell and they hit like hell. And we have better training programs for them. We found out we can prevent injuries by building a bull neck. So the necks on today's kids are so much thicker and stronger to withstand the shock."

And maybe to inflict punishment?

"Brutality? No, our kids aren't brutal. We never get penalized for roughness."

"Now that quarterback we're going to face, he better not run too much because he's going to get hit like he's never been hit."

"And we do have one player who's brutal. He's a black boy. He's bitter and he's hung up on that black business."

Social consciousness is something that Woody Hayes isn't really into yet. He takes his own bedcheck of the players when they're on road trips—he wouldn't entrust it to the trainer or assistant coaches because he feels it would undermine their relations with the players. Woody even revels in that much criticized area of recruiting 17- and 18-year-old kids to trade their physical skills for a college education.

"I like that recruiting better than anything else," he says. "I get into the homes, and I get a thrill from the homes I get into. I found if the parents are respected in the home, you got yourself a football player."

"Take this freshman half-back we have, Archie Griffin. He's the fourth of seven boys. His three older brothers played at Louisville, Kent State and Muskingum. Fine family. His father works at two jobs. If anything, Archie is a little spoiled."

"There are two things in a great home. One, the kid is wanted. Two, there's discipline. The parents are respected."

Does Woody then restrict his football recruiting to boys from "good" homes? How about the underprivileged kid?

"Oh, I'm looking for that fellow," he retorts, "because I owe him something. And no matter what his circumstance, I always find someone there who took the place of the parents. In one boy's case it was a homosexual. He didn't touch the boy but he washed his clothes and took care of him."

To Woody, the taint of hypocrisy in college football can be diluted. "I realized early," he says, "that enormous amounts of money were being made from our football program at Ohio State, and the only way to repay it is through education. So we graduate our boys at a rate of 84 to 88 per cent."

There is in truth an aura of satisfaction about Woody Hayes that derives from winning football games and really isn't shaken by the social critics of him and his sport.

"I'm a mean old walrus," he says. "But I feel I've been a credit to the game of football."

'Skins get last shot at marbles'

By BRUCE LOWITT

Associated Press Sports Writer LOS ANGELES (AP) — Washington's aging Redskins, many spurred by the knowledge that this may be their last shot at all the marbles, take the role of slim favorite into Super Bowl VII Sunday against Miami's unbeaten Dolphins.

The Dolphins, humiliated 24-3 by Dallas in last year's Super Bowl, cruised through a 14-0 season this year, then knocked off Cleveland and Pittsburgh in the National Football League playoffs to win their second straight American Conference championship.

But going into the kickoff for the nationally televised Super Bowl VII (12:30 p.m., PST, NBC) in Memorial Coliseum, Miami is listed a three-point underdog to the Redskins, who posted an 11-3 regular-season record, then walloped Green Bay and Dallas to take the National Conference crown.

Every seat in the massive Coliseum—the NFL says this amounts to 90,182 tickets—was officially filled nearly two weeks ago.

And with the sellout, it's the first time the NFL has lifted its local blackout of the game, thus giving Los Angeles fans a chance to watch the game on home television.

What they'll see is a lot of former Los Angeles Rams, including Washington Coach George Allen. When Allen was dumped two years ago by the Rams, after five straight winning seasons, he was signed by the Redskins. And, in a wave of veterans - for - draft choices trades, he brought many of his former players and assistant coaches with him.

With these veterans, quickly tagged the "Over-The-Hill Gang," Allen made the Redskins instant winners and got them into the playoffs for the first time since 1945.

Coach Don Shula, hired away from Baltimore for the start of the 1970 season, used Miami's youth to work a similar miracle with the Dolphins. He took a team with a 15-39-2 record in its first four years and, in 1970, vaulted them into the playoffs with a 10-4 mark, then brought them the AFC title with a 10-3-1 record a year later.

Allen, usually tight-lipped and dead-serious, was even more so Friday at the coaches' final appearance before the press. At times he sounded bitter about the attention which he and his players have received this past week.

"If I was running the Super Bowl," he said, "I'd have the team arrive perhaps Thursday or Friday to avoid all the distractions. We had 31 players being interviewed for an hour and a half yesterday," and he blamed that for what he called "the team's worst workout."

"I'm missing my first team meeting in 23 years of coaching to talk to you press guys," he said. "I hope your questions have some value. I've been answering the same questions since Monday."

Shula spiced his comments and answers with jokes about the difference in last year's school of Dolphins and this year's by saying:

"We came into the Super Bowl glossy-eyed last year but this time we arrived knowing what to expect."

Hope loses to Ashdown

The Hope Bobcats dropped another close decision, 58-56, to the Ashdown Panthers last night in Ashdown.

Paced by Bud Martin, Hope held command of the game until midway through the fourth quarter.

Victory came to the Panthers as Mark Pickett bucketed two free throws with eleven seconds remaining in the game.

Martin took game scoring honors with 18 points while Johnny Christopher and David Hall led Ashdown with 15 apiece.

Earlier the Bobkittens defeated the Ashdown Cubs, 37-34.

Hope's offense never could get rolling in the first half with 10-12 the halftime score.

The Bobkittens mixed a good defense with their offense as the score was tied 24-24 after three periods.

Hope then outscored Ashdown 13-10 in the final quarter to secure victory.

Gary Mitchell topped all scorers with 16 points.

This morning Yerger's seventh and eighth graders travel to Gurdon to do battle.

Thomas makes believer of coach

By MURRAY OLDERMAN

LOS ANGELES — (NEA) — To this day, he isn't quite sure what happened. All he knows is he walked into the gas station and right in the way of a bullet. It ripped into his belly and tore 13 holes in his intestines.

That was two days before Christmas 1968 and it made quite a mess of Bob Thomas. He almost died and when he got out of the hospital six weeks later, temporarily patched, his weight was down to 165 pounds.

It isn't quite the picture you have of a man whose forte is battering through the defensive lines of the National Football League, carrying the ball for the Los Angeles Rams.

Bob Thomas is the hottest young runner in pro football. In his first two full games as a starting back, he averaged 143 yards rushing per game. He is now bulkily put together at 195 pounds (the program lists him at 5-10 and 210). And he has the wide-eyed look of a young man who can't quite believe all these good things are happening to him.

It's been rough.

That 1968 shooting was supposed to have happened during a holdup. It could have been simply the flareup of a neighborhood fight because in the back of the gas station his father owned in Compton, on the outskirts of Los Angeles, and where Bob was working when the bullet hit him, there was a gambling parlor. The guy who shot him never was identified. The bullet didn't even knock Bob off his feet, though he felt a funny sensation and saw blood. It was a tough neighborhood.

By the fall of 1969, with his weight coming back, Bob was playing varsity football at Arizona State University (preparing at Centennial High School in LA and at Mesa Junior College). The Arizona State coach is a man named Frank Kush, who drove his kids until they're harder than the gila monsters who roam the desert around them.

"If you make it through his training camp," remembers Bob, "you can make it through any pro camp."

In 1970, he was Arizona State's leading ground gainer but in the pro draft the Cincinnati Bengals waited until the 15th round before picking him. He was the 379th choice out of 442 college players tapped by the 26 NFL teams. There's just not much market for a running back who's under six feet, under 200 pounds.

He reported to the Bengals in July 1971 and checked into the hotel for one night. The next morning he reported for orientation. That afternoon he ran through a light drill, without pads. Before dinner, he was released.

He was unemployed, married, with a one-year-old daughter whose name he can't spell. (His wife Jeratha, whose name he can spell, named the baby Shan-tah.) Bob called his old college coach for help. Kush contacted the Rams and persuaded them to take a training camp look at Thomas. The odds on the free agent rookie making the team had to be 200-1.

He made the team. Coach Tommy Prothro liked his speed — he ran the 40 in 4.6 — and the quickness with which he hit a hole and the recklessness of his drive. Bob never carried the ball once during the regular '71 season. He played on the special teams. And then halfway through the season he started to get those pains in his stomach, near where he'd been shot in that fracas three years earlier.

"The fluids," he explains, "had started to build up."

The doctors went in again and found that he still had a hole in one of his intestines. The surgery put him out for the season.

A couple of months ago, Bob Thomas' future looked as bleak as it had ever been. The Rams two top choices in the draft were running backs — Jim Bertelson, a talented back from Texas, and Larry McCutcheon, a big, strong guy. They still had Willie Ellison, who gained more than 1,000 yards in '71, and proven pros Larry Smith and Les Josephson.

Yet when the Rams opened the campaign against the New Orleans Saints, young Thomas was the starting fullback — Ellison was hurt — and scored two touchdowns while romping for 144 yards. When Ellison returned to the lineup, Thomas was benched and the Rams stumbled through a tie and a loss, their offense failing to score a single touchdown.

Prothro is a stubborn man. He was going to stick with Ellison and Smith as his running backs. The depth charts for the 49er game showed Thomas as the third string fullback. It can't be documented but there were reports that there was a suggestion from above that putting Ellison and Thomas in the same backfield might stimulate the Ram offense.

They started together against San Francisco and Thomas' brilliant running keyed a 31-7 upset which suddenly made the Rams look like title contenders again.

"I didn't know Thomas was this good," admitted Prothro, beaming. "He did it against New Orleans but it didn't prove anything. I decided I'd find out."

He found out.

Groza family gets its kicks

By JOAN RYAN

WASHINGTON (NEA)

There is a powerful temptation for the son of a successful man to chuck it all, tuck a daisy behind one ear and let life roll right on by. It's the safe and simple way of avoiding the odious comparison between son and sire.

But Lou Groza's son Jeff is not one to take the simple way out. A sophomore at Ashland College in Ohio, Jeff Groza has stepped into the outsize cleated shoes vacated by his father, who retired after 17 productive seasons kicking field goals for the Cleveland Browns.

Early indications are that young Jeff might end up erasing some of the NFL records for place kicking that his dad now holds.

Lou Groza I must point out, is quite an act to follow. It is rumored that he invented the field goal. Certainly, he wasn't nicknamed "The Toe" for his interest in ballet. More likely, it was because he was the first kicker who guaranteed the offense at least three points if they could move the ball across their opponents' 40 yard line.

With Jeff Groza promising similar productivity, the Grozas, Lou and Jackie, attend all of Ashland College's games.

Jackie, blonde and pink-skinned as a Renoir nude, yells and screams excitedly while her husband sits with dark Indian chief passivity.

"I'm more nervous now," Lou confessed, "than when I had to kick. I'm pulling so hard for him. Jackie gets all tensed up. She says she can't look when Jeff's got a big one. I never sat with her at a game before because I was always playing and I'll tell you she's a nervous wreck."

Jackie defended herself nicely: "It is so much harder to watch your son play than your husband. I don't know why. I just know how much he wants to do well, and—he's so young. I just sit and hold my breath on every play."

The family drama in the stands doesn't bother Jeff Groza. He has an impressive 75 per cent kicking record that has helped Ashland College into a top 10 ranking among small colleges.

The Grozas are justifiably proud of him. Jackie bubbles with motherly exuberance when someone asks how Jeff's doing. "I just can't wait to tell them he's gotten more points than any kicker in Ohio," she says. "I just brag about him but if somebody asks Lou, he won't say boo about him. He just says, 'Jeff's going to do all right.'"

The living legend that is Lou Groza may try to remain in the background of his son's career but spectators in the stands recognize his face—and his more familiar pounce.

Lou chuckles. "It's a good thing people know I'm Jeff's father because then they don't say anything when he misses."

What does Lou say when Jeff misses? Jackie remembered the last game. "He hit a 35-yard field goal, and then one from 37. But the one he wanted so badly, a 43-yarder, he missed. I just felt so bad for him but Lou kidded him after the game about being a Saturday night hitter . . . you know, kick them in practice before the game. They talked it over and kidded about it. Jeff was relaxed about it."

The Grozas are an unusually warm and close family. Saturdays are spent pulling for Jeff and Ashland College. Friday nights the Grozas turn out for Berea (Ohio) High School games to root for son Jon. "He kicked a 25-yarder last week," Jackie reported. And they have 11-year-old Judd paying the turf in the wings.
